The text

In our daily activities we often get in touch with the others and from these relations we meet some people whose interests, characteristics and personalities are similar to ours and we choose them as our friends.

To me, one of my best friends is Nam. Nam is only over eighteen but he is well developed; so he is thought to be twenty or more. He has black hair, a broad forehead, a straight nose and bright eyes. He is very good-looking. He has a kind heart and is easy to get on with everybody. We have been friends for a very long time. The deeper our mutual understanding becomes the more we feel closely attached to each other. "Birds of a feather flock together", Nam and I are hard-working pupils. We are the best pupils in our class. Nam is always at the top. He is good at every subject, but he never shows pride in his abilities and always tries to learn harder.

Nam's family is not rich enough. His parents are retired workers. He often spends most of his spare time doing useful things to help his parents in their old age. He gets up early in the morning to have enough time to deliver newspapers to neighbors before going to school. After school in the afternoon, he repairs bicycles and motorbikes. Therefore, the money he gets from his job is sufficient for his school fees and for his parents' presents. I like Nam very much because of his generosity and straight forwardness. He is always ready to help his weak friends in their study. As a result, lots of friends, thanks to his whole-hearted help, have become good ones. In my relation with Nam, I have got precious experience: thirst for learning, patience to overcome difficulties, helpfulness and filial piety.
