Dear Sir / Madam.

① The one moment when movie stars light up during interviews – and I speak from experience – is when you ask them about their humanitarian endeavors. Perhaps the most exciting aspect of stardom is to be able to use their fame to put their favorite causes under a spotlight, raise funds and push governments to act.

④ "I was moved by what I saw and asked how I could help," Jolie said. "I was told that in certain parts of the world the situation has been tragic for so long that journalists move on to the latest hot spot and people forget about it, and that only the presence of a celebrity can force media to talk about these regions again. So I said, 'here I am'."

⑥ "Through the Jolie-Pitt Foundation we are building clinics and hospitals in Cambodia, Vietnam and Ethiopia, the countries of origin of Maddox, Pax and Zahara, and in Namibia," she said. "We travel there regularly, we want the kids to know where they come from, and in the future they will have to take care of these projects themselves."
